Improving Urban Life in San Francisco

AIA San Francisco hosts Next American City as they travel to San Francisco for their series discussion on how to redesign our city streets for the future. Reserve your seat today!

Community Benefit Districts: The Future of San Francisco Development?

February 22, 12:00 pm

Community Benefit Districts (CBDs) are San Francisco's version of special assessment districts, a tool of localized governance designed to augment traditional city services. Join us for a panel presented by City Hall Fellows and the Craigslist Foundation that will explore what implications CBDs may have beyond streetscape improvement and beautification. Panelists will include Lisa Pagan, Project Manager, Office of Economic and Workforce Development, City and County of San Francisco; Robert Stokes, Assist. Professor of Urban Environmental Studies, Drexel University; and Kate Sofis, Executive Director, Urban Innovation SF.

Re-imaging Market Street: Creating Our Own Champs-Elysees

February 23, 6:00 pm

Next American City joins forces with San Francisco Planning & Urban Research (SPUR) and the American Institute of Architects San Francisco Chapter for an interactive charrette where we'll examine what it takes to make a great street, then we'll use those principles to re-envision Market Street. We'll break up into small groups, facilitated by the following excellent leaders with illustration provided by: Intro: Jeff Tumlin of Nelson-Nygaard Public Space: Kit Hodge of the Great Streets Project with Jane Martin, Shift Design Transit: Tim Papandreou of the SF MTA with Stuart Grunow, Dreiling Terrones Architecture Bikes: Neal Patel of the SF Bike Coalition with Dean Gunderson, Dreiling Terrones Architecture Public Art: Jill Manton of the Public Arts Commission with Mallory Cusenbery, RDC Architecture Commerce - Planning and Development: Kim Havens of Wilson Meany Sullivan with Peter Mueller, Stantec Commerce - Shopping: Karin Flood Eklund of MJM Management

The past decade has seen an overwhelming emergence of green roofs and vertical gardens, designed to combat the lack of flora in the city. Buildings around the world—from the Musée du Quai Branly in Paris, to the California Academy of Sciences in San Francisco—have embraced green walls or roofs for their economical, environmental, and aesthetic values. Vertical farms and gardens are also being envisioned as new ways to feed local and organic foods to city dwellers. Largely based on the principles of hydroponics, vertical gardens are mostly self-sustaining because they capture large amounts of natural sunlight and water, and use wind as an energy source. In a country where cities are suffocated by high rises, cement and industrial materials, where can green space exist? As this exhibition demonstrates, one possible answer is “up.”

Vertical Gardens features over two dozen projects, both imaginary and real by an international array of artists and architectural practitioners, including local studios Rael San Fratello Architects, Min Day, Boor Bridges Architecture, GLS Landscape | Architecture, environmental designer Lisa Lee Benjamin, and local nursery Flora Grubb Gardens. Additional pieces by Abruzzo Bodziak Architects; ATOPIA with The Harrison Studio; Bob Bingham and Claire Hoch; Patrick Blanc; Bohn & Viljoen Architects; Dickson Despommier, Eric Ellingsen, SOA Architects, Blake Kurasek; Evo Design with Mica Gross and Rogers Design Group; Todd Haiman; Haus-Rucker-Inc.; Edmundo Ortega and Dianne Rohrer (Co-Founders, Mundo Verde Ortega); Claude Boullévrage de Passillé; Oda Projesi;; Naomi Reis; Roomservices (Evren Uzer and Otto Von Busch); and SITE (Denise MC Lee, Sara Stracey and James Wines). Extensive photographic documentation of existing buildings containing vertical farms, gardens or green roofs by Hundertwasser; Renzo Piano with Chong Partners and Stantec; Emilio Ambasz & Associates; Humpert Wolnitzek; Chad Oppenheim Architecture and Design; Musson Cattell Mackey Partnership, Downs/Archambault & Partners, LMN Architects; Scandinavian Green Roof Institute; Conservation Design Forum of Chicago and Atelier Dreieitl of Germany; Enrique Browne and Borja Huidobro with Ricardo Judson and Rodrigo Iturriaga; and others.

FEATURE THIS MONTH

Architect, or Whatever

By: Kristina Shevory

Article first appeared in NYTimes on January 20, 2010.

AT the Ballard Farmers' Market in Seattle on a recent weekend, passers-by could be forgiven for thinking John Morefield was running for political office. Smiling, waving and calling out hellos to everyone who walked by his stand, he was the picture of friendliness. All he needed was campaign buttons and fliers.

In fact, Mr. Morefield, 29, is no politician, but an architectural designer looking for work. He was seated at a homemade wooden stand under a sign reading "Architecture 5¢," with a tin can nearby awaiting spare change. For a nickel, he would answer any architectural question.

In 2008, Mr. Morefield lost his job — twice — and thought he could ride out the recession doing design work for friends and family, but when those jobs dried up, he set up his stand. As someone in his 20s without many contacts or an extensive portfolio, he thought he might have an easier time finding clients on his own.

"I didn't know what I was going to do," Mr. Morefield said. "I had no other option. The recession was a real kick in the shorts, and I had to make this work."

A troubled economy and the implosion of the real estate market have thrown thousands of architects and designers out of work in the last year or so, forcing them to find or create jobs. According to the latest data available from the Department of Labor, employment at American architecture firms, which peaked last July at 224,500, had dropped to 184,600 by November.

"It's hard to find a place to hide when the economy goes down," said Kermit Baker, the chief economist at the American Institute of Architects. "There aren't any strong sectors now."

And it's not clear when the industry will recover. Architecture firms are still laying off employees, and Mr. Baker doesn't expect them to rehire until billings recover, which he thinks won't be until the second half of this year at the earliest.

In the meantime, many of those who have been laid off are discovering new talents often unrelated to architecture.
